All exporters and producers of food products, including dairy, meat, wine, vegetables etc., need to be aware that the Chinese government adjusted their requirements for allowing products coming into China.

On 12th of April 2021, the General Administration of Customs P.R. China (GACC), has announced two major updates of regulations, both of which concern food products imported into China:

- Announcement 248: New version of Registration and Management Rules of Overseas Manufacturers of Imported Food
- Announcement 249: New version of Administrative Rules of Imported Food Safety

Both Rules will officially be enforced starting from 1st of January 2022.

These new rules have many changes compared to their preceding versions. Announcement 249 has abolished 6 rules related to import/export of food, including the separate rules for aquatic products, meat, and dairy products. The new Administrative Rules of Imported Food Safety has effectively combined all these different old rules together so both the authorities and food product related operators can refer to one rule.

Announcement 248 has significant changes on the registration requirement for food manufacturers which wish to export to China. Previously only producers of several high-risk food categories, including but not limited to aquatic products, meat, and dairy products are required to be registered at the GACC, and only via recommendation by the competent authority of the manufacturer. In future all producers of all food are expected to be registered at the GACC, either via recommendation by the competent authority or via self-application.

Both rules will have great impact on European food manufacturers who are already exporting to China or planning to do so. Manufacturers will have greater responsibility on obtaining their permission to export to China, including to provide a guarantee of their products to comply with the Chinese relevant laws, regulations, and food safety standards. In addition, the expanded scope of registration implies that every food manufacturer should be prepared to receive inspection by the GACC.

During this course CCIC (China Inspection & Certification Group) and Way2trade will guide you through the new regulations and the general requirement needed in order to continue your exports of food to China. Unique insights of the development and implementation of the policies will also be provided.
